The six Army planes that flew over Murray yesterday were here on special detail to pay the Army Air Force's last respects at the full military funeral of Hugh Gray Erwin.

Joe Orr and Edwina Cain were injured yesterday from a fall from a bicycle on South Ninth Street.

They were taken to the Murray Hospital where authorities said that the boy was suffering from an arm injury while the girl had a laceration of the leg.

Funeral services for Mrs. J. H. Duncan, mother of Mrs. William Jeffery of Murray, will be held Thursday morning at 10:30 at the Hornbeak Funeral Home in Fulton.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sykes and Mr. and Mrs. Dick Sykes and children, Andra and Ted, Blane Sykes, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Klapp and son, Jimmie, all of Murray, and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Wallace of Cottage Grove, Tenn., spent the week-end in St. Louis. They also attended the Cardinal baseball game.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Hood and son returned Sunday, to their home in Bowling Green, Ky., following a visit with the Ollie Barnett family and other relatives. They spent Friday at Kentucky Lake.

A.A.U. MEET WINNERS—Parry O'Brien (left) gives a mighty heave to break his own National A.A.U. shotput record at the National A.A.U. track and field meet in Boulder, Colo.
O'Brien's put was 62 feet, 2 1/4 inches to break his 1958 record of 61 feet, 11 1/4 inches. The world record still remains at 63 1/2".
This record was also set by O'Brien in 1956. Hurdler Richard Howard (right), of the University of New Mexico, comes over the last hurdles and goes on to edge out Glen Davis in the 440-meter intermediate hurdles. Howard won in 50.7 seconds, bettering the A.A.U. Meet record of 50.9 set by Davis in 1956.

WATERFRONT TOUGH GUY James Cagney tosses a party at union headquarters to welcome Roger Smith as his new attorney, which also pleases the well-dressed secretary, played by Cara Williams, whom Cagney has hired for Smith. The rugged story of waterfront shenanigans also stars Shirley Jones. It's in color and CinemaScope and shows Wednesday and Thursday at the new Variety.

There are certainly cultural ties
between Mexico and New Mexico,
as between England and New England. But certainly nobody suggests any more that Massachusetts get its problems settled in Parliament.

New Mexico has not been under Mexican control since 1846, and the New Mexicans of Spanish descent are the first to tell you about it. When the New Mexico legislature this year decided to name a park for Mexican bandit Pancho Villa, the state's U.S. senator of Spanish stock, Dennis Chavez, protested so vigorously nobody has dared carry out the legislative decree.

New Mexico, a tourist state, is happy to remind visitors it is a blend of American, Spanish and Indian cultures and wants to keep alive the Indian and Spanish traditions. In some mountain villages of northern New Mexico only Spanish is spoken, and until the 1930's legislators heard their speeches translated into both Spanish and English so that all the lawmakers could understand.

A lot of tourist-oriented New Mexico folk are happy that visitors find the state interesting and different, but they're just a wee bit edgy about being confused with people of a foreign land.

It's Just A Joke When Koufax Is Batting But When He Pitches Records Are In Big Danger

By FRED DOWN
United Press International

It's a joke, son, when he's hit-tin' but it's not so funny when Sandy is pitching — and getting the ball anywhere near the plate.

Koufax, a Brooklyn-born $20,000-bonus baby who once sprained an ankle when he "tripped over the foul line" at Ebbets Field, looked like he finally is coming of age as a major league pitcher

Monday night when he struck out 16 batters while pitching the Dodgers to a 6-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Shy of Dean's Mark
Koufax' performance fell one strikeout shy of the National League mark set by Dizzy Dean in 1933 but he did earn a couple of lines in the record book.

The 16 strikeouts snapped the major league record of 14 for a night game previously held by Johnny Vander Meer, Bob Feller,
Bob Turley and Sam Jones.

The total of 16 strikeouts in one game also equaled the all-time mark by a left-hander—shared by Rube Waddell, Nap Rucker, Jack Harshman and Herb Score.

At the same time the total equaled the club single-game strikeout record held by any Dodger pitcher — in this case,
Rucker, July 24, 1909.

Koufax struck out at least one in every inning but the seventh.
Three strikeouts in the final frame would have set a new major league record. The Dodgers made only nine hits compared to 19 for the Phillies but they got seven walks. Eight Dodgers struck out, the game total of 24 for both clubs equalling a major league record.

Postmaster E. M. Berardinelli receives mail in Santa Fe intended for Mexico. "I guess people just don't read the 'New' in front of Mexico," Berardinelli said with an air of resignation.

Joe Bursey, a New Mexico political figure, tells about the time he took some Navajo blankets, Indian jewelry and other wares he felt were typically New Mexican to Boston for display at a national convention.

A woman — a school teacher at that — asked him questions about the display, and ended the conversation by saying, "I would like to compliment you on your English, senior. I have never been in your country."

There are certainly cultural ties
between Mexico and New Mexico,
as between England and New England. But certainly nobody suggests any more that Massachusetts get its problems settled in the life of a "STA-RITE" Pump.

On June 16, 1959 Guy H.
Creason of Benton, Kentuck-

old, for a new "STA-RITE".

On checking the records it was found to have been in there had never been any

A NEW MYSTERY The COUNT by A. A. FAIR [Erle Stanley Gardner]

CHAPTER 34

"WE want that idol and we want it right now, Donald," Sergeant Frank Sellers told me. "Then we've got an answer to Mortimer Jasper. Then we can go ahead and get this case out of our hands. Otherwise he can claim you played us for suckers and we're out on a limb."

I sighed. "I don't know why you take the word of some crook on a deal like this. I suppose if I hadn't been along and Jasper had accused Inspector Giddings of planning that idol, you'd have stuck up for him, Sellers. But because he accuses me, you come running up here in the middle of the night? Okay, let's go get the idol."

"Where is it?" Sellers demanded.

"In my apartment," I said. "Let's go," Sellers said. "I got up and buttoned my shirt collar. 'He said let's go,' I said, turning to Phyllis Crockett. 'You're going to have a black eye, Donald,' she said. 'That's nothing,' I told her. 'I think I've got a broken rib.' 'Come on, let's go,' Sellers said. 'Donald is going to give us that idol.'"

"Well, now, wait a minute," I said. "I didn't say I was going to give it to you. That idol is technically the property of Mrs. Crockett, and—"

"But," I said, "it's not stolen property."

"What do you mean?" I said. "Sylvia told me that Dean Crockett wanted her to take that."

"Yeah," Inspector Thad Giddings said. "She tried to hand us that idol—that idiot for just about two minutes."

"Wait, she told me that and I believed her."

"The hell you did," Giddings said. "She made a deal with you. You were to believe her on that, and she wasn't going to talk about this other evidence that—"

He broke off.

Sellers said, "Let's not do any more talking. Thad, let's go get that idol."

The three of us went down in the elevator. The squad car was waiting outside.

The two officers didn't say a word as they drove me to my apartment house.

We went up to my apartment. I opened the door and stood to one side. "Step right in, gentlemen," I said, and switched on the lights.

They entered the place, then suddenly stopped. "Whew!" Sellers exclaimed.

"What's wrong?" I asked. They stood to one side so I could see the interior of the apartment.

"Good heavens, somebody has wrecked the place!" I exclaimed. Sellers and Giddings exchanged glances.

I hurried past them over to the desk and surveyed the jumbled lock with lugubrious resignation.

"Well, it's gone," I said. Sellers shook his head. "This time you've got to come up with something better than that, Pint Size."

"What do you mean, something better than that?" I blazed. "Here's my place completely ruined and ransacked, and you birds are standing there dead on your feet. Now, suppose you quit kicking me around and find out who ransacked this apartment!"

Sellers looked at Giddings. "The guy's got a point," he said. "Let's get a fingerprint man up here and take a look."

He went to the phone and called headquarters.

By the time the fingerprint man arrived, I'd spotted the empty flask on the kitchen sink.

"That's not mine," I said. Sellers turned to the fingerprint man. "Take a look."

The fingerprint man dusted the whiskey bottle. "It's lousy with latent," he said.

They took my fingerprints; they dusted the apartment; they didn't find any fingerprints that weren't mine or the housekeeper's except the fingerprints on the whiskey flask.

"It looks like a plant," Giddings said.

"Of course it looks like a plant," Sellers told him, "but we aren't overlooking any bets; not in dealing with this guy."

I said, "The guys that picked on me were the fellows, I think I could identify one of them from a mug shot."

"Okay, Pint Size, we'll give you all the chance in the world," Sellers said. "Let's go to headquarters."

It was shortly after 1:30 A.M. that I picked out a face in the mug shots.

"That looks like the guy," I told Giddings.

Giddings was skeptical. "Okay, Wise Guy," he said, "we'll check the fingerprints."

Ten minutes later there was a very great change in the manner of Inspector Thad Giddings.

"What about the prints?" I asked.

Giddings looked at me and shook his head wonderingly. "They check," he said. "The guy's fingerprints are on that flask. You may be on the up and up after all."

I heaved a big sigh. "Well," I said, "now we know where the idol is."

"There are some other prints on there, too, Giddings said. 'Let's not go off half-cocked on this.'"

They left me alone for twenty minutes, then Giddings and Frank Sellers both entered the room.

"I guess we've got your men identified all right, Pint Size," Sellers said.

"How come?"

"The man you identified is named Ferguson. He's out on parole and he's living at 9611 Sixty-first Street. He makes regular reports to his parole officer. Has got a good job working in a TV concern. He's an expert on electronics and has been making good on his parole."

"However, while he was in prison he was teamed up with a fellow named Jimmy Lenox. Lenox's prints are also on that flask. That ties the two of them in together, and when those two crooks get together, you can gamble something is happening."

"Moreover, that address at 9611 Sixty-first Street almost racks up on the place where Mortimer Jasper is living on Carrollton Drive. Now then, we just could have something here."

I nodded.

"It'd be a good idea, under the circumstances, if you signed a complaint charging Lenox and Ferguson with burglary, and made an affidavit that would enable us to get a search warrant."

"Why should I sign anything?" I said. "Why don't you fellows take it on your own shoulders?"

"Now look, Donald," Sellers said, and his voice was almost pleading. "We're in deep enough on this thing. We've gone along on your say-so and... well, the whole thing is getting too mixed up. We aren't going to stick our necks out any farther. Now, you're a private citizen as well as a private detective. Your place has been burglarized and you think you know the men who did it. Be a sport. Sign a complaint and an affidavit and let us use a search warrant."

I looked at Giddings. "I don't know whether I feel like co-operating or not. I've been kicked around too much this evening."

Giddings got a deep breath. "Maybe I got you wrong earlier in the evening, Lenox," he said. "The way he said it was like having all his teeth pulled."

"Come on," I told them, "let's go."

Donald has reason to tell Frank Sellers. "You're too opinionated to have an open mind on that matter," as the story continues here tomorrow.

Psychopaths Add To Art, Literature

By DELOS SMITH
NEW YORK UPI — Two psychologists urge that scientific brethren not to blind themselves to the inner-workings of people by clinging to set ideas of what is normal in human outlooks and behavior.

They spoke of the set ideas that come out of the well-known psychologist traps which are supposed to trap the tested person into revealing his inner-self. What if he doesn't know his inner-self?

As an example, Drs. Jane Loevinger and Abel Oserio of St. Louis cited psychological data which show that soldiers who answered questionnaires in a way that indicated they were normal, with "high morale," were a little more likely to break down in combat than others.

Normality in Doubt
This, they said, was "a paradox" which shows that "normality" and "good adjustment" are tough questions with many contradictions. They didn't suggest there is no such thing as normality, but they cast doubt on whether psychological science has a sound idea of what it is.

On one hand are psychological theorists; on the other "the testers with their abstractions and over-simplifications" which try to make everything "more or less of one thing, like 'adjustment' somewhere between a pair of poles."

But theorists also get "stranded" in the details of their theoretical measurements of personality. What strands theorists and tests alike is that few persons have any ability to realize what makes them tick and to see themselves as others see them.

The young child learns he has impulses and that some he can't follow without getting into trouble. So he manages to control them, and in the process acquires a moral sense. By early adolescence this sense is strongly established, "at least on the verbal level."

Adolescent Rigid Thinker
"The typical adolescent is rigid prone to think in stereotypes, intolerant of deviations, punitive, and anti-psychological," the scientists continued in a communication to the American Psychological Assn. In other words, he has no idea that his attitudes are an outgrowth of the necessity of controlling his impulses.

But some people develop some insight into themselves. They mature enough to be able to express their standards thus: "I am the kind of person who..." whereas the adolescent begins his expression thus: "The right way is..."

In their opinion, "the great mass of the population is adolescent" in this regard, and if you are a psychologist attempting to help "adolescent" adults by psychological means, you can't tell how you're doing by testing for their insights into themselves because they haven't got any.

These adults are of the conventional personality which typically deals with unacceptable impulses by repression and denial. "All this poses a problem for psychology in getting at what is normal, and the scientific said, 'we have no easy solutions to offer.'"

But they thought it "better to acknowledge the difficulties of the problem than to draw misleading conclusions" from psychological questionnaires and other tests.

Nowhere But In Hollywood

By VERNON SCOTT
HOLLYWOOD UPI — The millionaire movie magnate strode purposefully through his plush office, removed a life-sized picture of himself from behind his desk and prepared for an hour's work.

He removed his jacket and slid into his swivel chair dressed only in slacks and a T-shirt.

It was conference time. Two lieutenants sat formally in deep leather chairs before the high-powered company president. The scene would be ludicrous anyone but in Hollywood.

The big shot reached down and exploded the quiet afternoon air with a lengthy blast of a ship's horn attached to a compressed-air container. He yelled, "It's war!" and fired a water pistol into the face of the nearest lieutenant, an impeccably dressed man of round proportions.

The wounded assistant leaped behind a chair and screamed, "You rat fink!" at his boss, who calmly squeezed the trigger again — this time hitting his target on the forehead.

Shows No Sympathy
Henchman No. 2 sat calmly through the demonstration, showing no sympathy for his cohort, seeking no favor from the bigwig. As Henchman No. 1 knelt behind the chair sulkily, Mr. Big swung open, instantly, two more underlings collided in their rush to accommodate the master.

"You've ruined my suit," exclaimed one of the newcomers.

"So what," his partner said. "It's an old one the boss gave you anyhow. Lemme see the label."

"Take your hands off me," cried the first.

"Out! Get out!" the boss bellowed as they beat a retreat.

"I can't stand all this confusion," Bosso went on. "I need some music to steady my nerves."

The millionaire producer reached for a bottle of pills and turned on a record player, full volume. He then raced to a book shelf to set five miniature toy animal musicians clanking away.

"That's better," the executive exclaimed.

"How about some refreshment before we get down to business?" he asked his employees. Before they could answer, he pushed a button and hollered into the office intercom, "Draw three beers."

Thirty seconds later a dignified waiter entered the room carrying three glasses of draught beer, drawn from the mogul's own keg in a nearby office.

No. 2, still silent, sipped gratefully.

"Now about our new picture, 'Visit To A Small Planet,' I think it's going to be the best we've ever done. What do you think?"

"Right."

"Check, boss."

"That's enough business for today. Let's break for lunch."

The conference ended, and Jerry Lewis, president of Jerry Lewis Productions, shepherded his assistants through the door. He looked weary but pleased with the effects of the conference.

The Working Mother Is Here To Stay

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — (UPI) — A child more independent, a working mother doesn't say a child development professor.

Dr. Albert E. Siegel of Penn State University conducted a study of working mothers' offspring with Dr. Lois M. Stolz at Stanford University. They studied 32 kindergarten children in their "interpersonal relations" in the classroom, with the emphasis on the children's "qualities of dependence and interdependence."

"Our findings indicate that there are no differences between the children of working and non-working mothers in respect to dependence and interdependence," said Dr. Siegel.

"Only extensive research can determine whether the revolution which has brought mothers from kitchen to office is good or bad for their children and their family life," Dr. Siegel said, "but for the time being I'm quite certain the working mother is here to stay."

Miss Devon Jackson Becomes Bride Of Lt. William A. Luther Jr., at College Church

MRS. WILLIAM A. LUTHER, JR.

The College Presbyterian Church was the scene Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, June 21, for the marriage of Miss Devon Jackson, elder daughter of Lt. Col. and Mrs. J. D. Jackson, and Lt. William A. Luther, Jr., son of Mr. W. A. Luther of Alton, S. C. and the late Mrs. Luther.

The impressive double ring vows were pledged with the Rev. William Spearman officiating in the presence of close friends and relatives.

The altar of the church pictured the dignity and solemnity of the occasion with a background of fern and standards of blush white peonies and gladioli. The beauty of the wall arch and cross was enhanced by a special arrangement of white flowers. Branched candelabra of lighted tapers flanked each side. The family pews were marked with white satin bows and green fern sprays.

As the guests assembled, a program of nuptial music was presented by Miss Jane Henry, organist, and Mr. Robert Baar, vocalist. Miss Henry's numbers were "Traumerel" by Schumann, "Liebestraum" by Liszt, "Through The Years" by Youmans and "I Love Thee" by Grieg. She accompanied Mr. Baar who sang a selection from "The Song Of Ruth" by Gaunod and "The Lord's Prayer" by Malotte at the close of the ceremony. The traditional Lohengrin march by Wagner and the wedding march by Mendelssohn were played.

Col Jackson gave his daughter in marriage and with him she approached the altar. She was beautiful in her wedding gown of white lace and tulle, featuring a princess bodice and bouffant floor length skirt. The scalloped neckline and long petal point sleeves were outlined with sequins and pearls. Her fingertip veil of imported illusion was attached to a coronet of sequins and seed pearls. Her bouquet was a love spray of white bridal roses and miniature ivy streamers.

Miss Carol Jackson, only sister of the bride, was her maid of honor. Miss Shannon Beasley, Reed, Ky., and Mrs. William White of Mt. Clemens, Mich., were bridesmaids.

They wore identically styled sheath dresses of pale blue cotton with full lace overskirts. Their headpieces were matching lace bandeaux, featuring a tiny bow. These attendants wore white gloves, slippers, and carried caskets of white carnations interspersed with green and white calladium leaves and white tulle. Lt. Clayton Abrams, Whitmore, S. C., served as best man. The ushers were Lt. William A. Edwards, Ft. Campbell, and Lt. Charles W. Glover Jr., Ft. Campbell.

Miss Wanda Walker, Smithland, registered the wedding guests as they entered the foyer of the church.

Mrs. Jackson selected for her daughter's wedding, a white eyelet model and white accessories. Mrs. Luther, stepmother of the groom, was attired in a blue embroidered sheath. Her accessories were white. Both wore corsages of feathered carnations.

Following the ceremony, Col. and Mrs. Jackson entertained members of the wedding group, immediate families and out of town guests with a reception at their home.

The bride's table was overlaid with a handmade cloth and centered with a white and green arrangement of peonies, stock, and calladium. The tiered wedding cake decorated with roses was served by Miss Loretta Tucker. Mrs. Jerry Alston served frosted lime punch. Bells of Ireland graced the service and silver candelabra of burning white tapers.

For traveling the bride chose a costume of French import, a pale blue and white embroidered sheath with white accessories. Her corsage was of white gardenias and tiny rosebuds.

Following a honeymoon to Miami, Fla., Lt. and Mrs. Luther will live in Lawton, Okla., while he is assigned to Fort Sill.

Out of town guests attending the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Beasley, Reed; Miss Barbara Walker, Paducah; Miss Marie Grubbs, Paducah; Miss Nancy Webb, Mayfield; Miss Marilyn Mahan, Mayfield; Miss Jenny Evans, Paducah; Mr. and Mrs. Orman Clinard and Mr. Kenneth Clinard, Springfield, Tenn.; Lt. William D. White, Hopkinsville; Lt. and Mrs. Robert Buckles, Ft. Sam Houston, Tex.; Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Luther, Frankfort, Ill.; Mrs. O. L. Andrews, Birmingham Ala.; and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lacey and Mr. Frank Lacey III of Birmingham, Ala.
